Investment highlights

Global equities ended the year on mixed footing as high technology valuations and diverging central bank policies encouraged investors to broaden exposure beyond the largest US tech names. The Nasdaq still finished 2025 up 21.2% and the S&P 500 gained 17.9%, but both softened into December. Europe and the UK outperformed, helped by cheaper valuations and improving sentiment, with the European STOXX 600 rising 20.7% and UK equities gaining 25.8% across the year. A weaker US dollar also boosted non-US returns in sterling terms.

Central banks moved in different directions in December. The US Federal Reserve cut rates again to 3.75% amid cooling inflation and labour softness, while the Bank of England also trimmed rates to 3.75% as UK inflation eased to 3.2%. The European Central Bank signalled rates may remain steady for longer, whereas the Bank of Japan tightened policy further due to persistent inflation and yen weakness. The key takeaway is that markets are no longer driven solely by US mega-cap technology. With valuations stretched in some areas and growth trends diverging, diversification and selectivity look increasingly important as we move into the new year.
